THE BACK WAY.

Balsac's Avenue of Escape From His Creditors.

In the year 1848 or thereabouts, being worried by duns in Paris, Balsac took lodgings in Passy, then a village in the environs, at a house in the Rue Basse. There is little remarkable about the front of the house. It is just a plain, white, two storied French dwelling of a hundred years ago or of today for that matter.

But at the back is a garden and at the bottom of the garden is a doorway leading into one of the oldest lanes in the world, from the look of it. Truly this rue, with its crumbling walls of stone and plaster, its ivy and its shade of overhanging trees, is as happily devoid of suggestions of modern "improvements" as anything to be found within the girdle of the fortifications.

By means of this byway Balsac, when insistent voices from within the house reached his ears as he worked in his little pavilion at the end of the garden, could avoid the unpleasantness of an interview with any holder of the overdue bills which throughout his life were the only tangible results of his experiments as a printer and type-founder.

It needs but little imagination to see him hurry off down the lane, hatless and in slippers, to await events, while he dreams of exploiting the jewels of the Golconda or the silver mines of the new world.—W. H. Helm in Critic.

Half Deaf People.

"If you are deaf in one ear," said the boiler-maker, "I don't care about giving you a job."

"Why?" asked the applicant.
"Because you can't tell what direction sounds come from; hence in a place like this you would be in great danger."

"How do you know I can't tell what direction sounds come from?" the applicant demanded.

"No person deaf in one ear," replied the boiler-maker, "can do so. A man deaf in one ear will look behind him if a gun goes off on his right. He will look up in the air if a child shrieks at his feet. He will look wildly in front of him if a locomotive whistles in his rear. A boiler shop is no place for such a man."

"I know I was like this," said the applicant, "but I didn't know all half deaf people were."

"They all are," said the boiler-maker, "and my shop is no place for them."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

OUR FASHION LETTER.

The Bolero Jacket Is Once More Restored to Favor.

WORN WITH PRINCESS GOWNS.

Some Interesting Details of Modish Footwear—Sunshades That Lead Beauty and Expression to Plain Faces Are a Boon Indeed.

A useful fan for the theater has a tiny electric lamp set in the handle, making it easy to read the programme, though the lights in the house are dim.

Large handkerchiefs are being used in Paris and have found their way over here into the wardrobe of smart women. These handkerchiefs have elaborately embroidered corners done in delicate shades of cotton.

There is a new hatpin with a head exactly resembling a raspberry formed of a cluster of mock rubies.

Hand bags to match summer gowns are now shown in the shops made of all over embroidery with pink, blue or green tints beneath. There are, too, dainty bags of embroidered white linen with belts to match.

When a sleeve is made with a long cuff of lace it is pretty to line the lace with chiffon, as it makes the arm look much whiter underneath. The same rule applies to a lace yoke.

Women with large waists should wear a girdle that is straight at the bottom in the back and shaped at the top.

Eccentric makes this charming princess corset costume. The bolero jacket is formed almost entirely of insertions of heavy ecru lace. The chemise and sleeve puffs are of white all over embroidered swiss.

SOME MINOR CONSIDERATIONS.

New stockings show designs of floral embroidery worked in the natural colors.

Long black silk knitted gloves are newer and smarter than the silk weaves we have known. These gloves come in all the different lengths required by the modish short sleeves. On the back of the hand is an openwork design. The twelve button length costs $1.50.

Everybody knows how it wears out the shoe ribbon to be constantly tying and untying it. Now there is a new tie for the low shoe which does not need to be tied in order to fasten it. You slip it through the eyelet and it fastens with a little catch.

The polonaise has conquered. It has followed closely upon the princess gown and bids fair to equal it in popularity.

Touches of gold and black used together are a new note on costumes.

There is an effort to push soft, heavy plush silk for street wear. Plush has again been brought into fashionable favor.

The Kidnaping Cat

EVERYBODY knows King Cole, that merry old soul who was accustomed to call for his pipe, his bowl and his fiddlers three, but not everybody knows that he once had a little daughter, who was kidnaped so cleverly that all Mother Gooseedom was at its wit's end to find her.

The name of this little princess was Elsa. One day, with Reta, her governess, she was playing on the lawn. Reta crossed the lawn to look for a ball which had rolled away from them. When she turned Elsa was gone. Reta called: "Elsa, Elsa; come Elsa! Here is your ball!" But Elsa did not come.

Poor Reta ran all over the grounds, sobbing and calling, "Elsa, Elsa, do come." The servants heard her and told the king and queen what had happened. Then what excitement there was! Everybody looked everywhere. She was not in the palace, nor in the park, nor in the woods.

Men were sent to inquire among the neighbors; others to search for miles

King Cole and his queen were seated on their thrones. The king said:

"My old friends and my young friends. The queen and myself have tried to make you happy for one day. Many times have you served us, and once again we ask your help."

Then he told them of their lost Elsa and how sad they were. He asked that each one help search for her. You may be sure all promised. They determined to start at once, and they left the palace thanking their kind friends for a most happy day.

Just one week later, when the father and mother were feeling very sad because no word had come from Mother Goose or her family, Reta said that Jack Spratt and his wife wished to speak to them. Jack said: "As we were coming through the woods last night we heard strange, beautiful music. It seemed to come from neither up nor down, nor right nor left. We looked about us and were very quiet."

"Soon something rushed by us. We followed and saw that it was the cat around. Days passed; no little Elsa. The poor king and queen were very unhappy. Reta would wander over the palace grounds every day, always thinking of some plan to find her.

One day she went to the queen. They talked together a long time, and this is what they planned to do: With her own hand the queen was to write out invitations to all the Mother Goose people, bidding them to a party at the palace in three days. Reta was to mail them that night at 9 o'clock in the elves' post box at the edge of the wood. The post box was in the trunk of a tree, where no one could see it except little children's nurses at 9 o'clock at night.

When the day arrived, who do you suppose came first? Jack Horner, with a big plate under his arm ready for another Christmas pie. Little Miss Muffet next came, much to Jack's delight. Reta sent them on the lawn to play.

Soon Jack shouted: "I see Jack and Jill. Poor Jill's head is all tied up." Little Miss Muffet, who was a good little soul, ran to meet them and asked Jill if she felt better after her dreadful fall. Jill said Mother Goose told her not to romp, so she sat quietly on the steps and watched the others.

Pretty soon who should come but Mother Hubbard, without her dog. She was old and tired and sat down beside Jill. She put a fresh bandage on Jill's head.

Do you remember the cow that jumped over the moon and the little dog that laughed to see such sport? They were the next to arrive. And then wasn't there chasing on the grass!

The king of the blackbird pie and his queen drove up in a beautiful gold carriage drawn by white horses with gold harness. With them was the poor little maid without a nose. You remember she was in the garden hanging up the clothes when a blackbird came along and nipped her nose off.

Boy Blue blew his horn while he was still a long way from the palace gate. When he came in sight his poor face was red from blowing and running. Mistress Mary gave him a cool drink from one of her cockleshells.

At the last moment Mother Goose herself came in her carriage, her tiny coachman driving the brown ponies. Little Bo-Peep was with her. The child had fallen asleep in the morning and all the sheep had strayed off. So Mother Goose required her to find them before starting for the party. Such a merry time they all had. Even the king and queen laid aside their sorrow for the day and joined in the sport.

After awhile a great bell sounded and all followed Reta to the dining hall. There was a long table with flowers and bright colored ribbons and gay candles. At each plate were pretty gifts.

After dinner Reta invited them into the lovely white and gold room, where with his fiddle. He did not see us, but we watched him open a door in a large tree trunk and disappear. We wanted to open the door and look in, but when we tried there was no door to be seen. So I took my knife, cut two tiny holes in the tree and looked in.

"We saw a pretty room, with all kinds of toys in it, a table spread with good things to eat and a dainty white bed. Your little Elsa sits in a rocking chair happy as can be while the cat plays his fiddle. Whenever he stops playing Elsa cries and calls: 'Mother, father, here I am. I want you to take me home.'"

"Then Mr. Cat commences his music again, and Elsa laughs and claps her hands joyfully. Now come along."

They hurried to the tree and looked in. First the little girl was listening with delight to the violin. When the music stopped she burst into tears.

Jack Spratt then with a hatchet made a big opening in the tree, jumped in and brought out the princess. With a joyful cry she ran into her mother's arms.

"Did you notice," Jack Spratt asked, "what enchanting music that was?"

"Yes," replied King Cole, "I did, and I am no longer surprised that the dog who heard it actually laughed, while the cow was so elated that she jumped clear over the moon."—Washington Star.

Magic With Cards.

This is rather a joke than a feat of magic, but it will create some fun and may often be kept up for some time without being discovered. The performer must take up his position on one side of the room facing a good sized mirror or chimney glass. He then makes his audience stand or sit facing him, when they will, of course, have their backs to the glass. After offering the cards to be shuffled and cut he takes the top card and holds it high up with its back to himself and its face to the audience. As it will be reflected in the mirror opposite him he will have no difficulty in naming it or any other card in like manner, till his audience either find him out or have had enough of the trick.
